BOSS PET CABLE

EVERYBODY ELSE

OUR PATENTED SNAP

Most competitor tethering programs use the traditional "loop & sleeve" connection with single swivel, bolt-action snaps. This technology has the following flaws:

- Requires the use of heavier cable than needed to secure the ends

We have built the lightest tether possible to maximize dog comfort while providing the holding power necessary to safely restrain the dog in each weight class.

- The loop & sleeve connection is a frequent failure point because the sleeve is crimping plastic which more readily gives, allowing the pet to escape

We use the "direct connect" metal-on-metal method for a more consistent hold.

- Single swivel snaps could become frozen or lodged under the pet's front leg causing failure of this vital safety feature. The pet could become tangled in the tie-out or even injured

With our patented twin swivel snap, we all but eliminate this possibility.

The industry standard when using dog weight ratings is to manufacture to 7 times dog weight (60 lb. dog = 420 lb. break strength). We engineer all of our cable products to 9 times dog weight.

BOSS PET COMFORT SNAP

EVERYBODY ELSE

A screen door spring arrangement using a compression spring with exposed wire loops to convert to an extension spring

OUR PATENTED SNAP

A fully-enclosed compression spring converted to an extension spring by our patented design

Most tethering product lines offer a spring-loaded model to absorb some of the strain placed on the pet when they get to the end of the tether. Existing technology, like that found in all competitor tethering programs, use the traditional "loop & sleeve" connection with a screen door spring inserted into the tether end. This existing design has the following flaws:

- The wire forms leave exposed hooks that can cause (and have caused) injury to the pet or owner

Our design is fully-enclosed with no exposed wire hooks.

- If the spring fails, the pet is generally free to roam

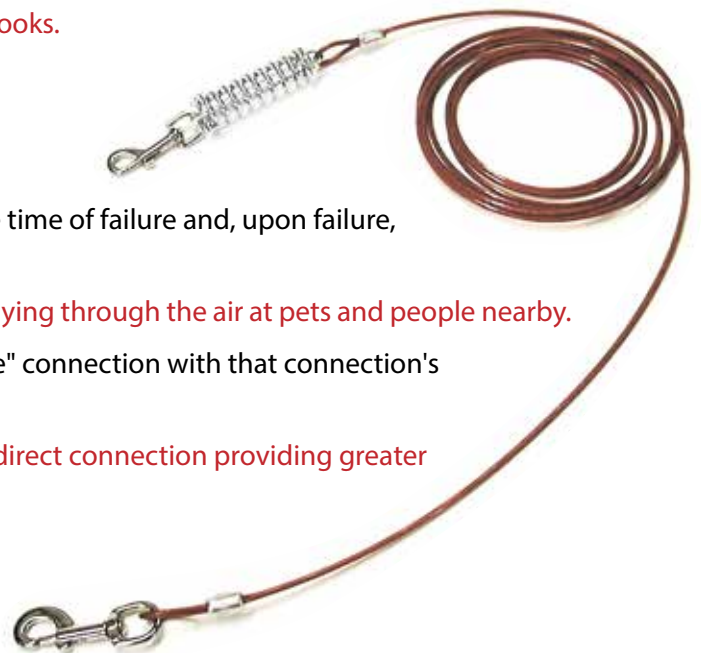

Our design actually allows the spring to fail WITHOUT the pet escaping.

- If the spring fails, it is usually fully compressed at the time of failure and, upon failure, metal parts go flying through the air, causing injury

Our design encloses the spring so parts will not be flying through the air at pets and people nearby.

- Existing designs require the use of the "loop & sleeve" connection with that connection's inherent flaws

Our design employs the preferred metal-on-metal, direct connection providing greater strength, reliability, and safety.

CABLE & TETHERING

WEIGHT-RATED

COLOR-CODING – MATCHES TETHER STRENGTH TO SIZE OF DOG

STEP 1:

We researched all dog breeds for common weight groupings and tether escape tendencies based upon a three-year study of tie-out failures.

STEP 2:

We developed five groups of dog weights each of which pose unique tethering challenges as shown above.

STEP 3:

We built the lightest tether possible to maximize dog comfort while providing the holding power necessary to safely restrain the dog in each weight class. We used a multiple of dog weight (9 times) for this purpose which exceeds the industry standard of 7 times.

STEP 4:

We developed product labels that clearly state which tie-out is right for a given dog weight class. This label scheme uses:

- Color-coded background unique to each weight class
- Cable color unique to each class
- Clear statement of dog weight on front of label

Since we have introduced this system..

- We have experienced a remarkable increase in sales (about 14% same store). It is simply easier for the consumer to select the tie-out they need.
- We have experienced a decline in returns to negligible levels as consumers select the correct tether initially.
